Hi Claire,

A bakery website lives or dies on two things: how quickly a customer on a phone can see today's bread, and how easily they can reserve it before it sells out. That is what I would build for you, in French and English.

Last year I built the site for Café Sama in Amman, with online orders for pickup. It loads in 1.6 seconds on a phone, and the owner tells me about 30% of weekend orders now come through it: yazan.example/cafe-sama

I would start with your menu and pickup times and build the ordering around them. One question first: would you like customers to pay online, or at the counter when they collect?

I can do it for $1,100 fixed, in three weeks and three milestones.

Best,
Yazan